

Windows and Occupant Comfort

Research Report - 0307

October-2003

Philip Kerrigan Jr. and Jim Larsen

Abstract:

How windows are part of a high performance wall system and what that means to the occupants.

About this Report

This was first presented at the 2003 EEBA Building Solutions Conference in Lincolnshire, Illinois.

About the Authors

Philip Kerrigan Jr., PE is a systems engineer with Building Science Corporation. Phil analyses residential buildings and applies high performance energy principles and metrics to the designs.

Jim Larsen is with Cardinal Glass Industries.

Direct all correspondence to: Building Science Corporation, 30 Forest Street, Somerville, MA 02143.

Limits of Liability and Disclaimer of Warranty:

Building Science documents are intended for professionals. The author and the publisher of this article have used their best efforts to provide accurate and authoritative information in regard to the subject matter covered. The author and publisher make no warranty of any kind, expressed or implied, with regard to the information contained in this article.

The information presented in this article must be used with care by professionals who understand the implications of what they are doing. If professional advice or other expert assistance is required, the services of a competent professional shall be sought. The author and publisher shall not be liable in the event of incidental or consequential damages in connection with, or arising from, the use of the information contained within this Building Science document.